STRATEGIES AND MILESTONES

We follow Agile Methodology (Scrum), we believe this is one of the best methodologies for MENA region.

A key principle of scrum is its recognition that during production processes, the customers can change their minds about what they want and need (often called requirements volatility), and that unpredicted challenges cannot be easily addressed in a traditional predictive or planned manner. As such, scrum adopts an empirical approach—accepting that the problem cannot be fully understood or defined, focusing instead on maximizing the team's ability to deliver quickly, to respond to emerging requirements and to adapt to evolving technologies and changes in market conditions.

WHY LIFETIMECODE?

We do our best to make our processes as clear and transparent for you as possible.

1 Strategy

The customer resolves all issues through a project manager responsible for work planning, overall management and progress tracking. The communication is carried out by email, instant messengers, phone and personal meetings.

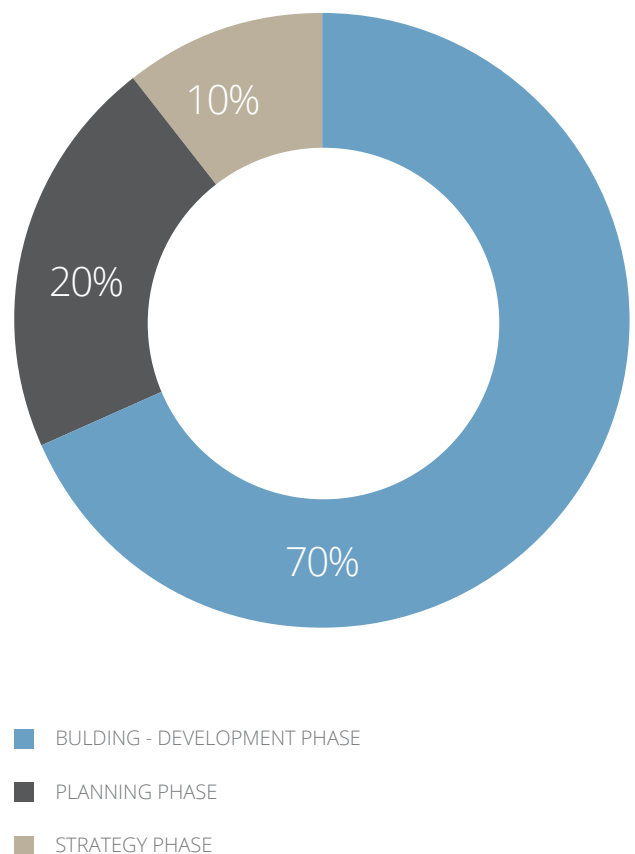

2 Planning

A detailed plan is created at the beginning of each phase and is updated by the project manager weekly or more frequently if necessary. This allows transparent tracking of the project status and provides a clear vision of the project costs at every stage.

3 Build

Ensuring that software components use unique namespaces and that each software component can be identified with versioning information are two important considerations for the Build portion of the Build and Test phase.

This is a simple donut chart representing the time consumed in each phase during the start of any project, the development phase is of course the largest.

METHODOLOGY

A sprint is the basic unit of development in scrum. The sprint is a timeboxed effort; that is, it is restricted to a specific duration. The duration is fixed in advance for each sprint and is normally between one week and one month, with two weeks being the most common. Each sprint starts with a sprint planning event that aims to define a sprint backlog, identify the work for the sprint, and make an estimated commitment for the sprint goal. Each sprint ends with a sprint review and sprint retrospective, that reviews progress to show to stakeholders and identify lessons and improvements for the next sprints. Scrum emphasizes working product at the end of the sprint that is really done.
